A SAD FATALITY.

A most distressing accident, and one which unfortunately had fatal consequences, occurred here on Friday last, when the little four-year-old son of Archie B. and Sallie Hoaglin was accidentally drowned in a large reservoir situated immediately behind Hoaglin's store on Broadway, and which was recently erected for the purpose of affording fire-protection to the adjacent buildings. The little fellow's parents reside at Boose, Idaho, and have remarkable to relate upon these separate occasions their boy had had narrow escapes from drowning and it was in consequence of their anxiety for his safety that it was decided he should remain with his grandparents here for a time, where it was thought the fate he seemed destined to meet would be avoided.

At noon on Friday last he left the house with the intention, as he expressed it, in his childish way of gathering flowers, and his absence thereafter occasioned no alarm for a while. His continued absence, however, led to his grandfather and under making a search for him, the continuation of which led them to the reservoir, where his little car floating upon the water and the sight of the bank having called to mind a tale that was heartrending.

Vigorous efforts were at once made by the distracted relatives to recover his body, although any hope of his being alive was known to be hopeless, but it was not until some considerable time afterwards that the body was recovered.

The news of the accident spread rapidly through the town and occasioned widespread sympathy for the parents and intimate relatives of the little boy. The manner of his death and the fact of no one being nigh at the time rendered the occasion one of additional sorrow.

The funeral took place on Sunday, the cortege proceeding from the residence of Mr. Hoaglin, to the Presbyterian Church, where service was held at 2:30. The sacred building was completely filled with sympathizers, and the service, which was presided by the Pastor, Rev. H. Arnold, was peculiarly fitting to the occasion.

Taking for his text the words "The Lord gave and the Lord takes away, blessed be the name of the Lord," (Job 1 and 2), the rev. gentleman then went on to say that "Sorrow is the noblest of all discipline. Our nature shrinks from it, but it is not the loss for the greatness of our nature. It is a scourge, but there is healing in its stripes. It is a chalice, and the drink is bitter, but strength proceeds from the bitterness. It is a crown of thorns, but it becomes a wreath of light on the brow which it has lacerated. It is a cross on which the spirit groans, but every Calvary has an Olive. To every place of crucifixion there is likewise a place of ascension. The sun that was shrouded in mist and heaven opens with hopes eternal to the soul which was nigh unto despair. There is comfort rest and deep in thinking that the path of sorrow we tread has been beaten smooth and wide by the feet of the best that ever trod this world; that our blessed Saviour was a man of sorrow, and that the best of His Church had been supported to journey by no other path than that their Master went."

It is not alone the mourner travels through the vale of tears. Apostles and Prophets are of the company. Saints and martyrs go with him, and the sorrowful face of the Great Redeemer, but sorrowful now no more, but resolute forever with the old book of brotherly sympathy to his servants eyes and hearts.

As this globe is but a dot compared with the heavenly worlds, so the sorrows of earth are insignificant compared to the joys of heaven. This holy healthfulness are reminded once more as we surround this sacred rock, "that here we have no continuing city." In the language of the Apostle James we are compelled to say "Life is a vapor."

The life of a child appeals to some as insignificant. The destruction of Martin Luther always appeared before his boys with unvoiced heart, "Who can tell," said he, "what may yet rise up amid these youths. There may be among those who shall be learned doctors, sage legislators, great princes of empire." Even then there was among them that solitary youth that shook the world.

What is the value of the value of a human soul on hearts cry out, make way for the children, these precious immortal souls from the hands of God.

The children that die young are like those spring bulbs which have

WINDY RIDGE.

Antelope hunters are plentiful in B.O. Mr. Frank Ream and family visited Ed. Ream Sunday.

Ed. Ream visited Dr. Cooley and family of West Bow Island last Saturday.

Miss S. Still and sister, Mrs. Abbott, called on Mrs. J. Lameroux one day last week.

M. E. Bobka expects to leave soon for his old home in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and his pet in town.

Mr. P. Berges and J. P. Lameroux are home after six weeks spent at ballhead butte.

Miss Miss Presley has returned home from Bow Island, where she has been confined at the Alberta Hotel with an attack of appendicitis.

WESTERN NOTES.

The C.P.R. intends building gas wells along their line between Calgary and Medicine Hat.

The Alberta Government has decided to build a tract road from Red Deer to Rocky Mountain House.

The C.P.R. has decided to build on Brigantine Creek, near Red Deer, a dam and reservoir to hold 1,000,000 gallons of water.

The C.P.R. has secured a sufficient flow of gas at Brooks, Alta., to supply the depot, offices and yards of the company, and its pet in town.

The cost to British Columbia for fighting forest fires during August, apart from the salary list of the regular fire wardens, totals over $20,000. There were 225 fires, which destroyed 1,000,000 feet of standing timber and 17,000 feet of logs.

The purchase of 30,000 acres of land in northern Alberta was made last week by A. W. Kelley, A. E. Stecher, and J. B. Madill, prominent capitalists from Detroit, Mich. Mr. Kelley said 25,000 acres some time ago of central Alberta lands to Michigan settlers.

Over 100 men, who left Edmonton a few days ago to prospect in the West, returned last week. W. A. Stewart, G.T.P. contractors, west of Wolf Creek, decided to return east on reaching Edmonton. No lodging was provided for them, and they were ordered to walk 81 miles to camp, which they refused to do.

SAYS LUMBER WILL BE HIGHER.

W. A. Austin, secretary of the Mountain Lumber Manufacturers' Association, who has been in town for a couple of days investigating the outlook for the lumber demand this fall and next spring, was asked regarding the present wholesale prices. He stated that he understood the market, which has declined from two to three dollars per M. during the past ninety days, owing to the falling off of the demand consequent to the crop scare and partial failure, would be immediately restored to its former basis. Mr. Austin stated that the manufacturers are carrying the highest priced stocks on record, and it is a well known fact that all the supplies entering into the cost of lumber are greatly increased. Therefore, in view of this condition it is his opinion that higher prices are certain.—Lethbridge Herald.

With regard to the above we understand that whatever may be done further west the prices at present prevailing in Bow Island will be maintained, and that no raise at present is contemplated.

WANTS A BOOST.

T. A. Ross returned on Wednesday from a trip to Calgary. He reports numerous inquiries being made of him regarding Bow Island, and states that it is the general opinion at Calgary that Bow Island is the "coming town" along the Crow's Nest.—Review.

We would very modestly ask if Greasy Lake isn't on the map, and if she hasn't just as much to make her "coming town" as Bow Island. How about Lethbridge and Taber? Wake up up, Brother Cotton, wake up—Greasy Lake Pilot.

Lethbridge and Taber, Brother Schell, are big enough and old enough to pull their own canes. As regards Greasy Lake, how ever, we will do our best to give your little burg a boost now and again—that is, until the Pilot has decided upon a permanent anchorage and is able to take the work up itself.

At a meeting of the board of managers of the Presbyterian Church this week, Dr. Patterson was unanimously elected a member of the Board.

FASHIONS AND FANCIES

HANDKERCHIEF making is fascinating work, and any girl who can make one will find it a most useful and easy to her less industrious associates.

French or Irish linen of finest quality should be selected to carry elaborate embroidery, and the greatest care should be exercised in the cutting of the square. There is a thread in the fine direction in the only safe way, as otherwise the delicate material is apt to twist and become unmanageable. When attention is given every fine line of the embroidery the handkerchief need not be handkerchieved, although infinite care must be devoted to the entire effect of the work.

Increasingly narrow handkerchiefs are more frequently seen, and these are especially popular, and rarely allow handkerchiefs so treated have corners embellished delicately with wreaths, clusters of semi-detached butterfly and flower designs. Sometimes only one corner is decorated with a rather large and elaborate spray pattern, or a scrollwork will enclose a small initial. Only when there is no other decoration should a monogram be employed.

One of the most graceful arts that a girl can acquire is to learn to converse and keep her fingers busy at the same time. There are girls who can talk well and girls who do so well with their hands, but they rarely combine the two accomplishments skillfully.

One of the secrets of the art is to avoid doing in public any piece of work which requires close attention. Be clever at accomplishing a good deal by always having on hand certain kinds of work, or work at certain stages, which admits of its being done more or less automatically, and let this occupy your fingers, which will keep them busy for you, while you make yourself agreeable conversationally to those around you.

Remember that courtesy requires you to give the person to whom you are talking, or to whom it is necessary to pay interest and attention that your work must be secondary consideration. If you reverse the order you will be thought very stupid, will be avoided as an uninteresting young person and will much better confine your work to hours especially set apart for it.

When at boarding school girls are apt to acquire the bag habit, more than fifty attempts at neatness than from any other fondness for their attractive responses, but the habit remains with them usually, and even when grown to manhood the sex finds new uses for bags and new ideas in the making of them.

In the outfit one young girl is getting ready to take on her first term at boarding school this fall is a dressing room which will stand many trips to the laundry and will look as fresh at the end of the semester as when it was first carefully and tenderly in her school trunk. This is a set of Oriental bags, one large bag for laundry—there are two of them just alike so that one can be washed while the other is in use—a smaller one for made handkerchiefs and one of a different shape to hold the neckwear that is to be refolded for another wearing.

The largest bag is made of four pieces of Chinese cotton, the design being a white ground with the figure of a Chinese woman in the center, the figure is richly colored and looks like a Japanese print. The four lengths of cotton form the two sides of the bag, two for the front and two for the back. They are fastened together with heavy white cotton in a fancy stitch, herringbone or feather stitch, and a three inch lark is left at the top, where a piece of lace is inserted crosswise to hold a narrow strip of wood which is the end through which to run a pair of white cotton window laces to hang the bag up by.

An opening is left in the front side of the bag, between the two pieces of cotton cloth and just below the cross piece of wood, so that there is a place to slip in folded clothing. When the bag is hung against the dressing room door or the wall it looks much more attractive than some of the flowered ones that are more common, and the novel Japanese print effect.

The soiled handkerchief bag two strips of cotton, two towels they are, are sewed into two together with a fancy stitch and the ends are hemmed down over an embroidery loop which has first been wrapped with embroidery binding. The top of the bag gathers over the loops, and where the round handle comes from the bottom a bit of the embroidery binding is used to tie a pretty knot and to keep the handle from slipping out of the side of the bag and then open up all the way. It is more convenient to leave them open for the neckwear.

The neckwear bag is the simplest of all. It is, in fact, a miniature handkerchief bag, an strip of cotton twill sewing for the length and width. The frill at the top is narrower in proportion to the length of the bag, and a slim bit of wood, perhaps four inches in length, is inserted in the casing made by two rows of fancy stitching. These bags look very pretty and are a most useful addition to the outfit.

There are some wonderful bits of old brocade and striped silk which can be bought at bargain prices and made into charming little bags for holding ribbons, handkerchiefs, gloves, etc. These are invaluable to the girl who must live in small quarters and who cannot afford all the time necessary to keep her belongings laid out in neat rows and piles in her closet.

Small strips of linen or pipe can be bought now, which for the jackets cut open to the waist line are almost indispensable.

Black Net Embroidered with Gold Beads—Crisie Silk Collar

Fancy lace stitches are blended with the embroidery pattern, as in the case of the gold beads, which show petals of lace and steel springs for her slippers. It makes a marvelous difference in the shape of a slipper if it is never put away without one of these laces. Not, forsooth, a small thing, but a girl who wears it daily, that is devoted hours of toil to a handkerchief may be reduced to a ragged fringe the first time it is laundered.

The girl who likes everything about her belongings dainty and in good order will probably have several of the little lace and steel springs for her slippers. It makes a marvelous difference in the shape of a slipper if it is never put away without one of these laces. Not, forsooth, a small thing, but a girl who wears it daily, that is devoted hours of toil to a handkerchief may be reduced to a ragged fringe the first time it is laundered.

The girl who likes everything about her belongings dainty and in good order will probably have several of the little lace and steel springs for her slippers. It makes a marvelous difference in the shape of a slipper if it is never put away without one of these laces. Not, forsooth, a small thing, but a girl who wears it daily, that is devoted hours of toil to a handkerchief may be reduced to a ragged fringe the first time it is laundered.

The way to do it is to cover the steel spring with ribbon to match her closet fittings, which in their turn should match the decorations of her room. Her sister ribbon a little wider than the stripe of steel and sew together both edges of two pieces, making a cover for both sides of the spring. Slip the case over the spring and when it is in place pull the threads full on the steel. The sewing, by the way, must be a running stitch, with no back stitches so that it will pull.

When the covering has been firmly fastened in place and the ribbon is pulled tight, the steel spring will be covered by a wider ribbon that matches it and sew it on the top of the curve. If one wants it a little more elaborate one can put another loop at the front a little above where the slipper touches the spring; this gives a dainty and pretty effect. A shoe shelf holding a row of slippers supplied with these decorated laces is a most attractive sight.

Unless the petticoat is correctly cut, its smoothness and is of the proper length, the frills will not sit well and hang with neat domes of self material or look smart. Every fashion, however eccentric, has its compensations, and it may be said in favor of the present vogue of narrow skirts that the petticoats wear beneath them demand a wonderfully small amount of material and that very little labor need be expended upon their making.

In lieu of the frilled and be-demonstrated petticoat of yesterday is an almost tube-shaped affair of fine material, bearing over so slightly below the knees and finished with a deep hem or a narrow skirt. To make an almost perfectly fitting petticoat of this sort, the material by a five-gird skirt pattern of the correct length and take up as much as possible for the hem, in order to give weight to the garment.

Better than any of the twisted silks for summer service are the petticoats of self material of black China silk, made similarly to those of heavier material, but trimmed with embroidery of self material or embroidered stripes.

For lingerie gowns there are special petticoats and the present vogue of narrow skirts and ribbons bordered with handkerchiefs.

Petticoats of striped seersucker, chambray, green linen or mercerized dark colored linen, have rows of tucks above a wide hem and are intended for use with girding, canopies and tramping costumes. For permanent service fancy bands are made into short wide divided petticoats, faced with four inch wide tulle ribbons.

A Scarf-Like Mantle of Crisie Satin

The pioneer mantle made exists, with wide ruche down the centre, are fitted with the coats cut in a deep V or U shape, but the fringe borders which have not the full are too flat to be pretty with a wide open jacket.

The little white vest slips on under the jacket and has a piece of the material across the back, which stands up just a trifle above the coat collar, protects the collar band of the jacket from soiling.

This vest is double breasted, fastening with pearl or croquet buttons. Small gilt buttons are often seen, but gilt buttons must be used with care and discretion, as they have the power to make or mar the effect of an entire costume.

Jackets of all designs and materials are more worn than ever. There are the double jacket and the single jacket, jackets of equal width their entire length, and those which are very wide at the throat, narrowing into nothing toward the hem. Some are of finest lace bordered with lace, others entirely composed of lace. Net and sheer lace are often combined, and again the jacket is made of embroidery edging. If the lace cannot be really good in quality it should not be used at all, a plain handkerchief lace gathered or shirred piece being preferable.

When the frill is worn when fastened just at the top, its length being decided by the cut of the pocket with which the jacket is made. With a colored linen coat a frill or ribbon bordered with self material or embroidered stripes, or a colored linen, light or dark blue, pink, green and tan, are worn frequently with the all white suit, while for the white coat the waistcoat may be of a contrasting tone. For a white belt contains the small waistcoat of metal blue water and shirring, and give just the necessary additional warmth.

But at the top of the garment full the frill is gathered and the principal touch at the moment which gives much a smart air to every French gown.

CHIEF THE GUINEA BOYS

HUMAN nature is pretty much the same everywhere, and even in Guinea, as the following story shows.

In certain parts of New Guinea, the natives are very peaceful, and the traveler in search of sport finds the pursuit of them an exciting occupation. Walaby steaks are a refreshing change from canned meats, and the natives are only too glad to have the remnants of the carcass. One occasion a Britcher had been ashore in one of the sparsely populated islands of the coast, and secured four wallabies, an ample supply for his whole party, native and foreign.

But he found that, although plenty is regarded as a virtue in this part of the world, that no trouble is considered too great to obtain it, even of the native boys in the party would touch it.

This was a mystery until one of them explained that they had been trained in childhood in the belief that, if they ate walaby before reaching a certain age, it would stop their growth.

And this strange belief, which is one of the country where walaby were few, and one can imagine the crafty old and cunning of one another as the folk stated round the festive pot smoking people declined the succulent dish.

And a house in town, and a fine steam yacht, a lot of steeds with a record time, and a hunting lodge in the land of Kent.

And a motor-car of the touring kind, and a chain of Goldcliffe yet unnamed. And a block of stock in the N. J. P. And a thousand bonds of the C. & O. And an office building on Broadway, And a home built like the Gothernham, And a love for travel in India, And a million dollars in anthracite. If such a maid should have in sight, And say "I'm yours," I'd reply "You're right!"

BY KAHULUI BAY

Ever the waves roll shoreward, ever the plovers cry, Ever to each on the sand, hills, or over the lone dunes fly.

Ever to each on the sand, hills, or over the lone dunes fly, Ever to each on the sand, hills, or over the lone dunes fly.

The white reef breathes a summer, The white reef breathes a summer, The white reef breathes a summer.

One is its strongest recommendation, It seldom fails.

The Merry Muse

LOVE IS SO STRONG

Love is so strong, It joins our souls forevermore, sweet heart.

No matter how the winds of ill blow long, No matter how the storms of life roll on.

Love is so strong, It can not stand alone amid the strife, It can not touch our faltering lips to speak.

It can not even save our little life, But love is strong!

Yet love is weak: Those whom our eyes have loved, have lost, And thoughts too deep for speech, ring out the words of love.

And love alone can face death's speech, And still be strong.

"Constant Johnson, in Everybody's."

THE REVERIE OF A BACHELOR

I think of a maid with sparkling eyes, And hair as gold as the sunlit sky, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.

And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul, And how she fills the furrows of my soul.
